CHAPTER V
CONCLUSIONS AND SUGGESTIONS

This research was conducted to analyze the types of loanwords used in the mass media. In this research, the researcher has chosen Kompas newspaper articles dated 6 and 7 May 2018 from the Politics and Law section and the Economy section.

5.1.1 Summary and Conclusions

There were 106 loanwords from the four articles taken as the data source. The researcher has found out two major types of loanwords in the four articles. They were the naturalized loanwords and loanwords used ‘as is’. There are 98,08% (102 out of 104) categorized as naturalized loanwords and 1,92% (2 out of 104) categorized as loanwords used ‘as is’ from these articles. The researcher found out that there were three types of spelling adaptations, namely: (1) the spelling addition, (2) spelling omission, and (3) spelling change. These adaptations may be followed by any pronunciation adaptation to approximate the Indonesian pronunciation system. There are noun, verbs, and adjective loanwords. The data show that there are 75% loanwords are noun, 4,81% are verb, and 20,19% are adjective.

The result of the research shows that loanwords are the result of the global communication and there are always the needs for new terms following the fast development of science, technology, and other fields of life. Spelling and pronunciation adaptations happen in order to naturalize to words into Indonesian words. The fast development of most aspects of life has urged Indonesian language speakers to use any English loanwords ‘as is’ which might later undergo naturalization.
5.1.2 Suggestions

Based on the result of the research, the researcher would like to propose the following suggestions:

1. For researchers: Due to the limitation of the research as it only covers two days editions of the newspaper, the researcher would like to suggest research of this kind can cover more newspaper edition to know more about the process of naturalization.

2. For the Indonesian language speakers: The writer would like to suggest that they should use more Indonesian language to grow the vocabularies in Indonesia, so that someday the Indonesian language may also influence other countries language.

3. Finally, the researcher hopes that this study could inspire those who are interested in doing similar study with different main theory. It can be the theory about English loanwords from another linguist. Also, further studies on other sections of Kompas newspaper or other media can be carried out, so as to come up with more generalized results.
